Android phone app alternative

Facebook is the most popular social media site on planet Earth. It has over a billion registered users, most of whom are active in almost a day-to-day life. Unfortunately, the official Facebook app is an official Facebook app that uses, resource hogging, battery drainage catastrophe an app that many people don't want. It's always nice to have options, so let's take a look at the best Facebook apps for Android. If these aren't doing it for you, we have a second list of Facebook alternatives here that's a little more in-depth! There are new Facebook apps coming down the pipelines too, but we don't think they're prime time-ready enough just yet. This includes apps like this. Price: FreeDonem you are likely on this list to move away from this app. However, sometimes it is inevitable. Every time Facebook rolls out a new feature, the official app will have it long before third-party Facebook apps. The official Facebook app suite includes Facebook Messenger, Facebook Groups, Facebook at Work and Facebook Mentions (if you're famous). They're not great for battery life, but they'll always get the new features first. Facebook Messenger is also notoriously difficult to use outside the official app. Consequently, Facebook also makes Facebook Lite. It's a super lightweight, simple and surprisingly good alternative to its older, battery-powered brother. If you want something lighter than normal Facebook, we recommend that you try the Facebook Lite app. Faster for Facebook LitePrice: Free/$2.99Faster for Facebook Lite is one of the newest Facebook apps. Use the lighter resource-intensive Facebook Lite and less like its template instead of the usual Facebook. The app includes support from Facebook and Facebook Messenger, can view all kinds of content such as video and GIFs, and can be changed to classic Facebook mode if necessary. It's a web wrap like most Facebook apps. However, the dark mode and the all-in-one experience are definitely nice. The premium version goes for $2.99 and that's a perfectly reasonable price for it. It's better than most. Friendly Social BrowserPrice: Free/$1.99-$9.99Pa Social Browser Friendly is one of Facebook's newest apps. It has a pretty decent set of features too. That includes theming, Facebook Messenger support, the ability to customize your news feed, and more. You can also download videos from Facebook. Customizing your newsfeed lets you filter things like keywords. This is a great way to get rid of the nonsense you don't want to see. This is definitely among the best third-party Facebook apps. The pro version opens part of the feature and goes for $1.99. This application is free for those who use Google Play Pass. It also supports LinkedIn, Twitter and Instagram if you want alternatives for them. MakiPrice: Free/Up to $4.99Maki is a useful and functional replacement for Facebook. It offers both Facebook and Facebook Messenger along with a small app size, no ads even in the free version, and an unlock fingerprint for privacy. You get themes, support from multiple accounts, the ability to download photos from Instagram, and more. The application is a few bugs here and there, but nothing that undermines the overall experience in our tests. PhoenixPrice: FreePhoenix is another Facebook alternative supported by Facebook Messenger. You can do almost all the same things as the official app and the Messenger section works with things like voice calls and chat heads. You also get a few extra features not available in the Facebook app. We've experienced occasional failure or hiccups from time to time during our tests, but it's also totally free without ads for you to get what you pay for. Simple for FacebookPrice: Free /$1.49Simple for Facebook stays true to its namesake. It's a simple web wrap for facebook's mobile site. It includes all the basic features. This includes interacting with posts, uploading photos and videos, and all that. It also has support for Facebook Messenger. About the only other remarkable thing about the app is the small selection of themes. As we say, this one is really simple. The free version has ads. You can purchase the full version for $1.49 to get rid of it. SlimSocialPrice: FreeSlimSocial is a new Facebook application that keeps it perverse simple. His claim to fame is its intensely small size (100KB), which shows no ads, and is open source so you can go see the source code and contribute to its development if you want. Other than that, there's not much to talk about. It will be a bit slow and clunky like many third-party applications. It's not that bad, though. The developer has also expressed interest in adding new features along the way, such as background notifications, along with more things. . Swift for Facebook LitePrice: Free/$0.99Swift for Facebook Lite is among the lightest Android Facebook options. It has an installation size of 30MB and 20MB of RAM usage. The installation size is not so impressive but the use of RAM is. It also features features Facebook and Facebook Messenger. You can do the basic things. This includes uploading photos or videos, tagging friends, posting updates, and interacting with posts. It won't blow you out of the water. However, it takes you to where you need to go without taking up too much of your phone resources. You can get rid of single-purchase ads in the $0.99 app. Swipe over FacebookPrice: Free/$2.99Swipe for Facebook is one of the most powerful Facebook apps. It has a laundry list of features, including an ad blocker, Facebook Messenger support, themes, chat heads, Material Design, and support for more than 30 languages. It is less resource intensive than the stock Facebook app. However, it's a little bigger than something like SlimSocial. The app even includes several that mock the stock Facebook app, Google+, and other settings. The free version has most of the basic features. A single $2.99 purchase on the app brings you the full experience. Tinfoil for FacebookPrice: FreeTinfoil is a little bigger, but people still swear it. Tinfoil's claim to fame is being a Facebook app that doesn't ask for any of his permissions, hence the name. It's a web wrap like many of these. Thus, most of its features are similar to the web version. This is an excellent option for people who still want to use Facebook but don't want it installed on their phone at all in any capacity. It hasn't received an update in quite some time, so we may not include it in the next update to this list, but for now, it's an ad-free solution without permissions. The only drawback is the lack of updates, as the app hasn't seen one since 2017 (as of the time this writing). Let's hope that changes. If we've missed some great Facebook apps, tell us about them in the comments! You can also click here to see our latest lists of Android apps and games. We see a lot of interesting apps in Android land – apps that take advantage of the flexibility of the platform to do innovative things you won't find on any other mobile operating system. The app, launched yesterday by developer Chris Lacy (the man behind Action Launcher), really has the potential to change the way you use your phone or tablet. In short, it acts as a companion to the usual mobile browser intelligently handling all the links you open from other applications. That sounds a little weird, I realize. But once you use it, you'll be a surprised how smart an approach it is. And if you're like me, you'll wonder how something so sensible had never existed before. Say you're in the Google+ app and tap a link, for example. Normally, your device would eject you from Google+, load Chrome, and then load the web page while you watch and wait. (I'm using Google+ for this example, but the same could be said of Facebook, a Twitter client, or almost any application where external links are opened.) With the link bubble, the page starts loading in the background as soon as you tap the link, and then pulls up in an overlay window when in fact it's ready to see it. No waits, no workflow interrupted, and no wasted time. You can shrink the page and move the Link Bubble circle anywhere on the screen if you want to save it for later. And if you prefer to save the link to a service like Pocket or share it in any other app on your device, you can simply tap the circle, and then drag it to the appropriate shortcut. You can even do this before the page has finished loading, if you want. You can tap several links and let them load with the link bubble, too, then keep doing what you were doing and see the pages in overlapping windows when – and you – are – One of the cool side benefits of Link Bubble is that it also eliminates the round trip jump that sometimes happens when you tap a link inside an app – like when you tap a YouTube or Google Play link on Twitter and watch it open first in your browser and then ping about your Destination. Link Bubble skips that extra step and just takes you directly where you want to go. You almost have to see it in action to appreciate the full scope of how it works. Make a selection of this demo video: To be clear, Link Bubble is not meant to replace your regular browser, but rather to complement its functionality and work alongside it. I would never open Link Bubble to start a new browsing session, for example; just jumps to handle open links from within other apps in a more elegant way. The main link bubble app is free of charge. In order to make the most of all its features, you'll need to pony up to five dollars for a Pro license key.
